Exploring the ins and outs of the WAC Fellows and WAC Faculty programs

DELANEY SWAIM

The Graduate WAC Fellows Program is one of seven programs at the Pearce Center. This program was founded in 2017 by Cameron Bushnell and Austin Gorman to explore ways to increase the quantity and quality of teaching writing in classes conducted by graduate teaching assistants in various disciplines across campus. Bushnell described the program as... READ MORE

Consulting: Clemson student edition!

KYLIE SNYDER

The Client-Based Program matches Clemson classes with local clients who need communication deliverables. Through the program, students gain communication skills that teach them how to creatively problem solve through writing, setting and achieving reasonable goals and building confidence in themselves and their abilities.

Since 2003, over 167 classes, 5,200 students, 30 faculty and 325 clients have been a part of this program, producing over 1,006 deliverables. These deliverables range a span of different mediums, from brochures, research reports, websites, to multimedia presentations, print advertisements...

The VID experience

PRAVI BOMRAH

Have you ever wondered what it's like to dive into the world of design and videography while still in school? Meet the Visual Information Design program, a unique experience that bridges the gap between classrooms and real-world clients.

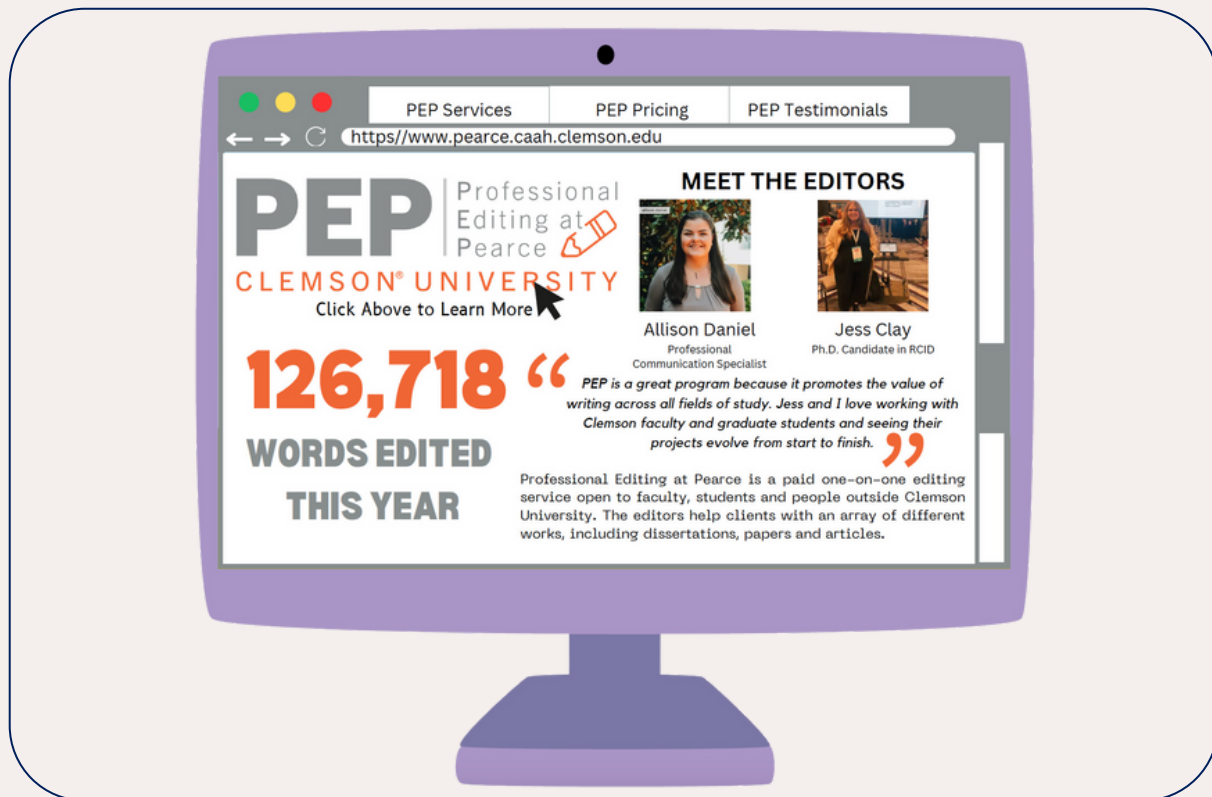

The VID internship is a hands-on learning experience that connects students with real clients. It's not just about textbooks and lectures; it's about immersing yourself in the creative process... READ MORE

Empowering engagement: The Pearce Service-Learning Faculty Fellows program

TALEAH HOLT

The Pearce Service-Learning Faculty Fellows program is an opportunity to gain the best practices for service-learning and community engagement. Open to all Ph.D. students and faculty, participating fellows receive a $2,500 fellowship award to support their commitment to service-learning excellence. With no prior experience in service-learning pedagogy required, the program is available to anyone interested in service-learning at any rank. This year-long program encourages participants...
